2. This story is logically impossible. Let us start from Avery. If Avery takes off their mask and realizes that River is not there before them, then Avery must be there in order to realize that River is not there. Same holds for River.
3. This story helps us understand that we need the state of the thinking human in order to be able to imagine the state of the butterfly. It is the thinking human—even the dreaming state—that allows for such leap (the fact that I could be a butterfly dreaming I am a human).
